OUR EMOTIONS DEFINE US

As individuals, we respond differently to similar situations. Some of us cry whenever our heartstrings are plucked; for others, tears are reserved for tragedy. When we know one another well, our emotional responses can be as informing as words.

Try not to assume that another's emotional response will be the same as your own.

Laughter and happiness are much easier to share than tears and sorrow.

Author Insight

People Are Emotional Beings

Humans are often influenced by their emotions than by cognitive awareness. Events can rekindle emotions related to a relationship, even though it has ended.

Against the World

Leslie's gasp stopped her in mid-sentence. "What's wrong, Les? What happened?" Robin asked.

Leslie sat open-mouthed, shaking her head slowly from side to side, and staring at the letter in her hand. "No... no... that couldn't happen..."

"WHAT couldn't happen?" Frannie asked.

"Paul. Paul's dead. His entire squad was killed in a bomb run. I can't believe he's gone. I was glad he went to Vietnam because he was doing something worthwhile with his life, and he wasn't making me miserable. He was so lost when he didn't get a scholarship, and angry that I accepted one so far from home."

No one uttered a word. "I haven't
